

Example 16.1.7

If four triplets occur in succession, without intervening notes or rests, the triplet sign may be doubled. The triplet sign will thus be brailled twice before the first triplet and once before the last triplet.

Example 16.1.8

Triplets are easiest to recognize when the notes are connected by a bracket or curved line and when the print music includes a small numeral "3." Sometimes, however, the "3" is missing or very small, and it may even be confused with a finger mark. Whether or not the "3" is shown in print, the triplet sign must be shown in braille. To establish the presence or absence of a triplet, you may need to count the beats of the measure very carefully.

Example 16.4.1

The image shows a musical staff in bass clef with a key signature of three sharps (F#, C#, G#) and a 3/4 time signature. The music begins with a fermata over the first measure, followed by a series of eighth notes beamed together, marked ad lib. The Braille transcription below uses music commas to group the eighth notes across bar lines.

16.5. Other Uses of the Music Comma

Braille grouping is of course not available for eighth notes. The normal beaming of eighth notes in printed music is ignored in braille (MBC-2015, Section 8.2). Occasionally, however, eighth notes in print music are beamed in special ways, as in unusual time signatures (such as five-eight) or unusual metrical divisions where the beaming crosses the bar line. The braille reader needs to know about these kinds of beaming. Section 8.3 of MBC-2015 explains the use of the music comma for special beaming of eighth notes and for other unusual situations.

Example 16.5.1

The image shows a musical staff in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a 3/4 time signature. The music consists of eighth notes beamed together, with a fermata over the final measure. The Braille transcription below uses music commas to group the eighth notes across bar lines.
